The DCI might express some discontent with his secure telephone service because of several recent irritants. On 1 June GSA workmen threw the wrong circuit breaker on the seventh floor effecting the ringing mechanism on the executive secure telephone system. The DCI's phones rang constantly until our technicians could get to the area, find the breaker thrown and reset the system. On 7 July the DCI apparently lost a secure telephone connection when calling the President. The two secretaries were talking but the connection was lost when the call was being switched to the President and the DCI. We will never know the exact cause, e.g. secretary mistake or equipment glitch, but the DCI has some cause to be suspicious of our secure telephone system right now. We are discussing possible upgrades with the DCI's people to make the system more convenient.
